The White Sulphur Springs Case. A DECISION BY CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE AS TO JURISDICTION.

The Washington Post of yesterday says : Chief-Justice Waite, who, as judge of the United States Circuit Court for West Vir-United States Circuit Court for West Virginia, has been in Parkersburg taking testimony in the famous White Sulphur Springs case, involving a conflict of jurisdiction between that and the District Court, has rendered his decision. This decision is: That the Circuit Court has jurisdiction over all the property except the two acres next to the depôt of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad. It is based upon the ground that in the first case of Hodges & Brothers against the defendant company, when the sult was dismissed, there was no order entered of record releasing property from custody, although the attorney of the plaintiffs motified the marshal that the suit was dismissed, and as there was no appearance by fine ass missed, and as there was no appearance by the defendant, that he should not hold the property any longer under that order. It was conceded that the District Court had possession of the property in the sec-ond suit of Hodges & Brothers against said defendant company, before the order was made in the Circuit Court, in the case of Stewart vs. said defendant com-pany, in which the receiver was appoint-ed, but inasmuch as the Circuit Court had made no order releasing the marshal from Mean temperature, 71½.
